In January 1907, Nettie Johnson Spofford explained what she wanted to see on a child's drawing paper. Work bearing a pupil's name, she wrote, “should not be the work of the teacher.” The teacher could suggest improvements, but the drawing belonged to the pupil. Her report describes the work of a drawing supervisor who had only one period a week with her high-school students.[8]

From Merrimac to the classroom

The Merrimac birth register records Nettie Johnson Spofford born on May 8, 1879, to Nathan J. and Mary E. (Shorey) Spofford. It gives Merrimac as the parents' residence and describes Nathan as a body maker. The distinctive full name, town and chronology make the connection to the later drawing supervisor Likely. Shorey is the surname in this register; the different surname Bryant in Beveridge's later account remains unexplained.[2,1]

The town's 1898 annual report lists Nettie J. Spofford among the Merrimac High School graduates of 1897, in the General Course. This Confirmed listing gives an independent school connection for the Class of 1897 portrait. The portrait's sitter identification is still attributed to Beveridge, and its connection to this graduate remains Likely: the reverse has not been inspected.[3,1]

The Massachusetts Normal Art School's 1902-1903 catalog lists Nettie J. Spofford with Class A and B certificates in 1899 and 1900, followed by a Public School Class diploma in 1901. The heading describes students who passed examinations, completed certificate work and received certificates or diplomas. This is Likely the Merrimac drawing teacher, although the entry gives neither her hometown nor her parents. It does not establish an enrollment date, continuous attendance or a modern college degree.[4]

Athol's financial report for 1901-1902 lists $22.50 beside Nettie J. Spofford's name among school salary expenditures. The name and period make this a Likely connection to the Merrimac teacher. The entry gives no job title, length of service, salary rate or permanent appointment. The salary heading and the continuation with her name must be read together.[5]

Teaching, drawing and a family provision

Nettie's teaching was not confined to drawing at the outset. Merrimac's 1904 school report records that she had left the Birch Meadow school to take up professional duties elsewhere. It does not name her destination or fix the precise departure date.[6]

By the 1906 town report, she was back in the local school record, submitting what she called her first report as director of drawing. She described freehand and mechanical classes, with pupils from all four high-school years working together in the mechanical class. Some were ready for advanced work while others were beginning. She requested reference books, pottery, casts, small tables or stands, and provision for displaying work without exposing it to ordinary classroom wear. These are her requests, not proof that the items were purchased.[7]

In her report dated January 25, 1907, she proposed making high-school drawing elective throughout the course. With only one period a week, she believed students who wanted to advance could accomplish more. She also explained a rise in materials costs: three grammar schools that had shared supplies in one building now occupied three buildings. Each needed its own set. Once those sets were provided, she expected drawing paper to be the chief expense for the next five years. Her report records the proposal and forecast, not their eventual adoption or outcome.[8]

Her father's will gives a glimpse of a responsibility that might have fallen to her. On November 26, 1908, Nathan J. Spofford provided a life interest in his Merrimacport homestead for his wife, Mary E. After her death, daughters Clara B. Williams and Sarah A. Spiller were each to receive a quarter, and Nettie half, subject to a narrow strip of land left to Clara. If Nettie paid for needed repairs during her mother's lifetime, the estate was to repay her afterward. These are Confirmed will terms; they do not establish that repairs occurred, property passed as directed or Nettie lived in the house.[9]

The later working years

The Merrimac sections of directories labelled 1909, 1912 and 1916 carry her teaching career beyond the town reports. Each lists Nettie J. Spofford as a teacher at Merrimac Port. These are Confirmed directory listings, snapshots of how she was described, not proof of continuous employment or of a particular school employer.[10,11,12]

Later directories suggest that drawing became her occupation in another form. A Nettie J. Spofford appears as a draftsman in Lawrence, working at 283 Essex and boarding at 237 Bruce. The provider labels this volume 1920; the printed page says it covers the year ending September 1921. The same name and a related line of work make the connection to the Merrimac teacher Likely, but the entry supplies no age or family to settle it.[13]

The Lowell entries offer a firmer connection to one another. In 1924 and in the directory for the year ending January 1926, Nettie J. Spofford is a draftsman at 40 Middlesex, room 114. Her residence changes from 35 Livingston Avenue to 3 Belmont. The shared workplace links those entries closely. Their connection to the Merrimac teacher remains Likely; neither entry names an employer or explains what she drew. The provider labels the later volume 1925, distinct from its printed coverage year.[14,15]

What remains unknown

Her death and burial remain unidentified. The available sources do not fill in the whole course of her working life, the exact Athol role, her drafting employers or duties, or the school attendance interval. No date of death, retirement or reason for the end of her career is inferred. This account follows the dated records without treating the gaps between them as continuous employment.

22 SCHOOL REPORT.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

To the School Committee:

The following report of the public schools of Merrimac is respectfully submitted:

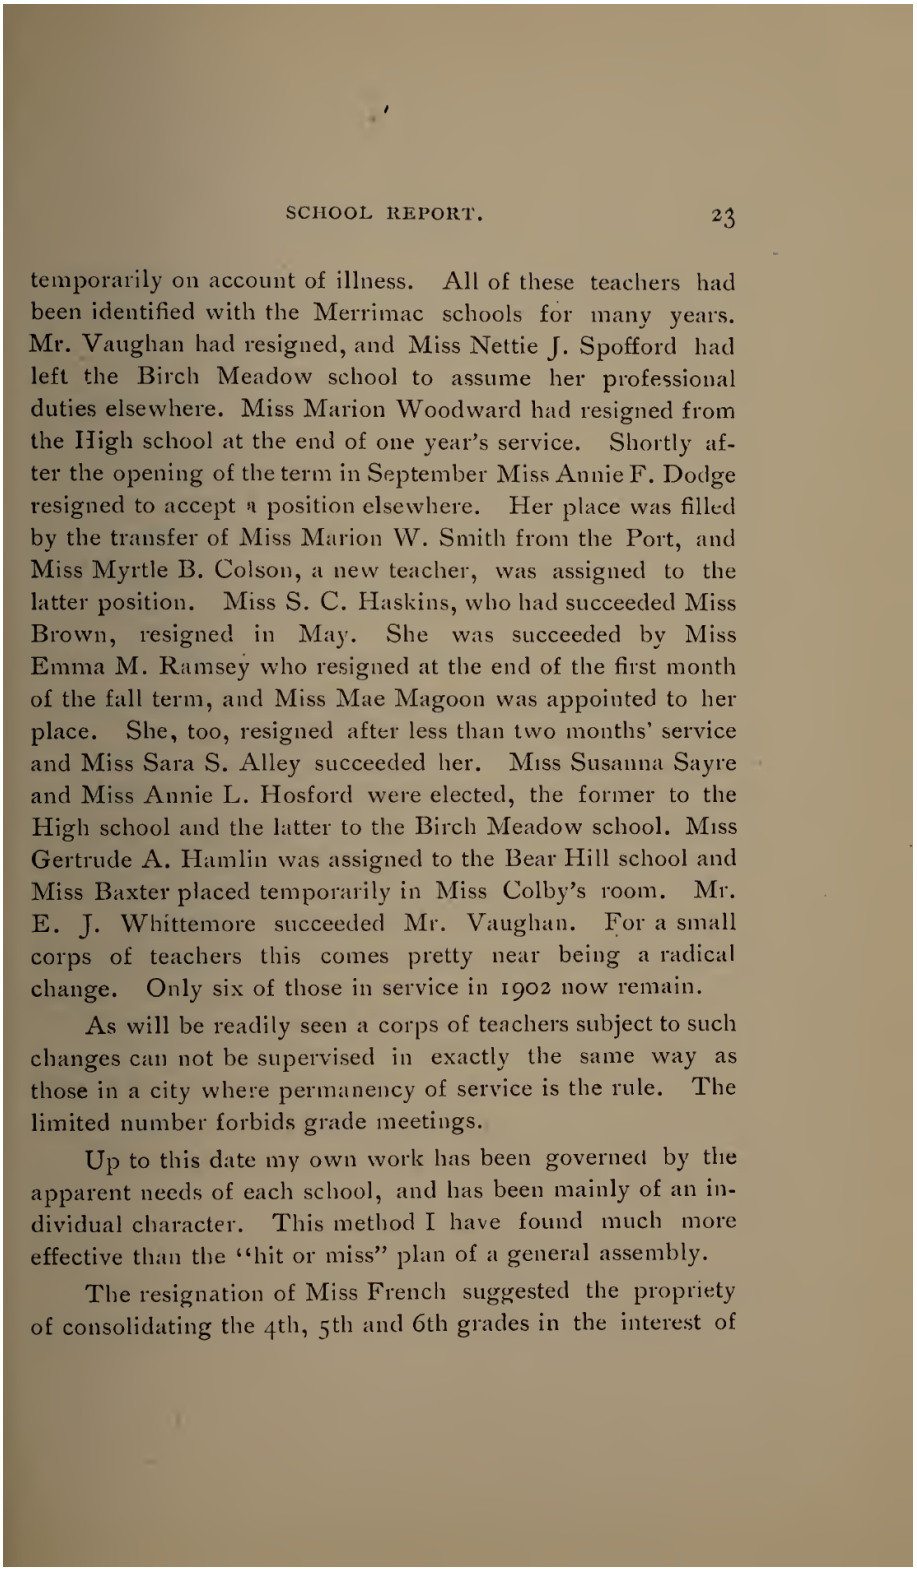

In taking up the work of supervising the schools a second time, after an absence of a year, it was a pleasure to find that so few changes had been made in the work. The statement of Mr. Cutts, in his report for last year, that the work had been "continued in the same channels," I found to be literally true, and I fully agree with him in his opinion that it has been attended "with a good degree of success." It was fortunate that such was the case, for continuity of work is one of the main elements of success. Too often a change in supervising officers is productive of changes in methods and courses which, however good such changes may be, are likely to result in confusion and temporary demoralization. I am satisfied that the teachers have been very faithful.

While there has been little change in the work, the contrary is true as regards the corps of teachers. Miss L. Pearl French and Miss Mary L. Brown had secured more lucrative positions elsewhere, and Miss Etta H. Colby had withdrawn temporarily on account of illness. All of these teachers had been identified with the Merrimac schools for many years. Mr. Vaughan had resigned, and Miss Nettie J. Spofford had left the Birch Meadow school to assume her professional duties elsewhere. Miss Marion Woodward had resigned from the High school at the end of one year's service. Shortly after the opening of the term in September Miss Annie F. Dodge resigned to accept a position elsewhere. Her place was filled by the transfer of Miss Marion W. Smith from the Port, and Miss Myrtle B. Colson, a new teacher, was assigned to the latter position. Miss S. C. Haskins, who had succeeded Miss Brown, resigned in May. She was succeeded by Miss Emma M. Ramsey who resigned at the end of the first month of the fall term, and Miss Mae Magoon was appointed to her place. She, too, resigned after less than two months' service and Miss Sara S. Alley succeeded her. Miss Susanna Sayre and Miss Annie L. Hosford were elected, the former to the High school and the latter to the Birch Meadow school. Miss Gertrude A. Hamlin was assigned to the Bear Hill school and Miss Baxter placed temporarily in Miss Colby's room. Mr. E. J. Whittemore succeeded Mr. Vaughan. For a small corps of teachers this comes pretty near being a radical change. Only six of those in service in 1902 now remain.

As will be readily seen a corps of teachers subject to such changes can not be supervised in exactly the same way as those in a city where permanency of service is the rule. The limited number forbids grade meetings.

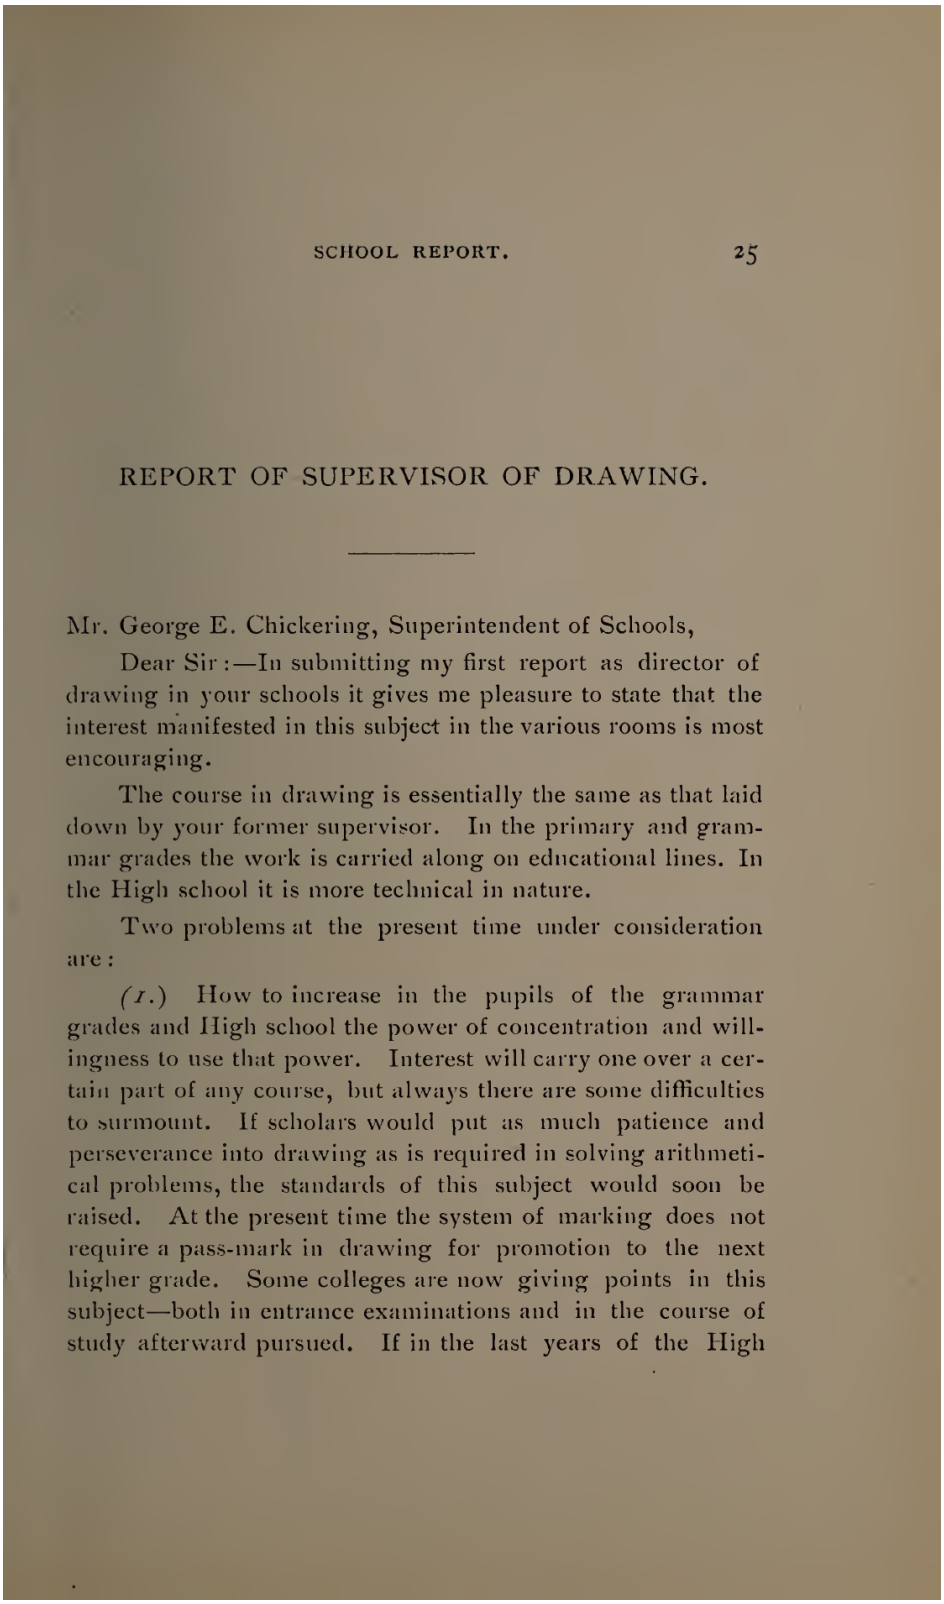

Up to this date my own work has been governed by the apparent needs of each school, and has been mainly of an individual character. This method I have found much more effective than the "hit or miss" plan of a general assembly.

The resignation of Miss French suggested the propriety of consolidating the 4th, 5th and 6th grades in the interest of

SCHOOL REPORT. 25

REPORT OF SUPERVISOR OF DRAWING.

Mr. George E. Chickering, Superintendent of Schools,

Dear Sir:—In submitting my first report as director of drawing in your schools it gives me pleasure to state that the interest manifested in this subject in the various rooms is most encouraging.

The course in drawing is essentially the same as that laid down by your former supervisor. In the primary and grammar grades the work is carried along on educational lines. In the High school it is more technical in nature.

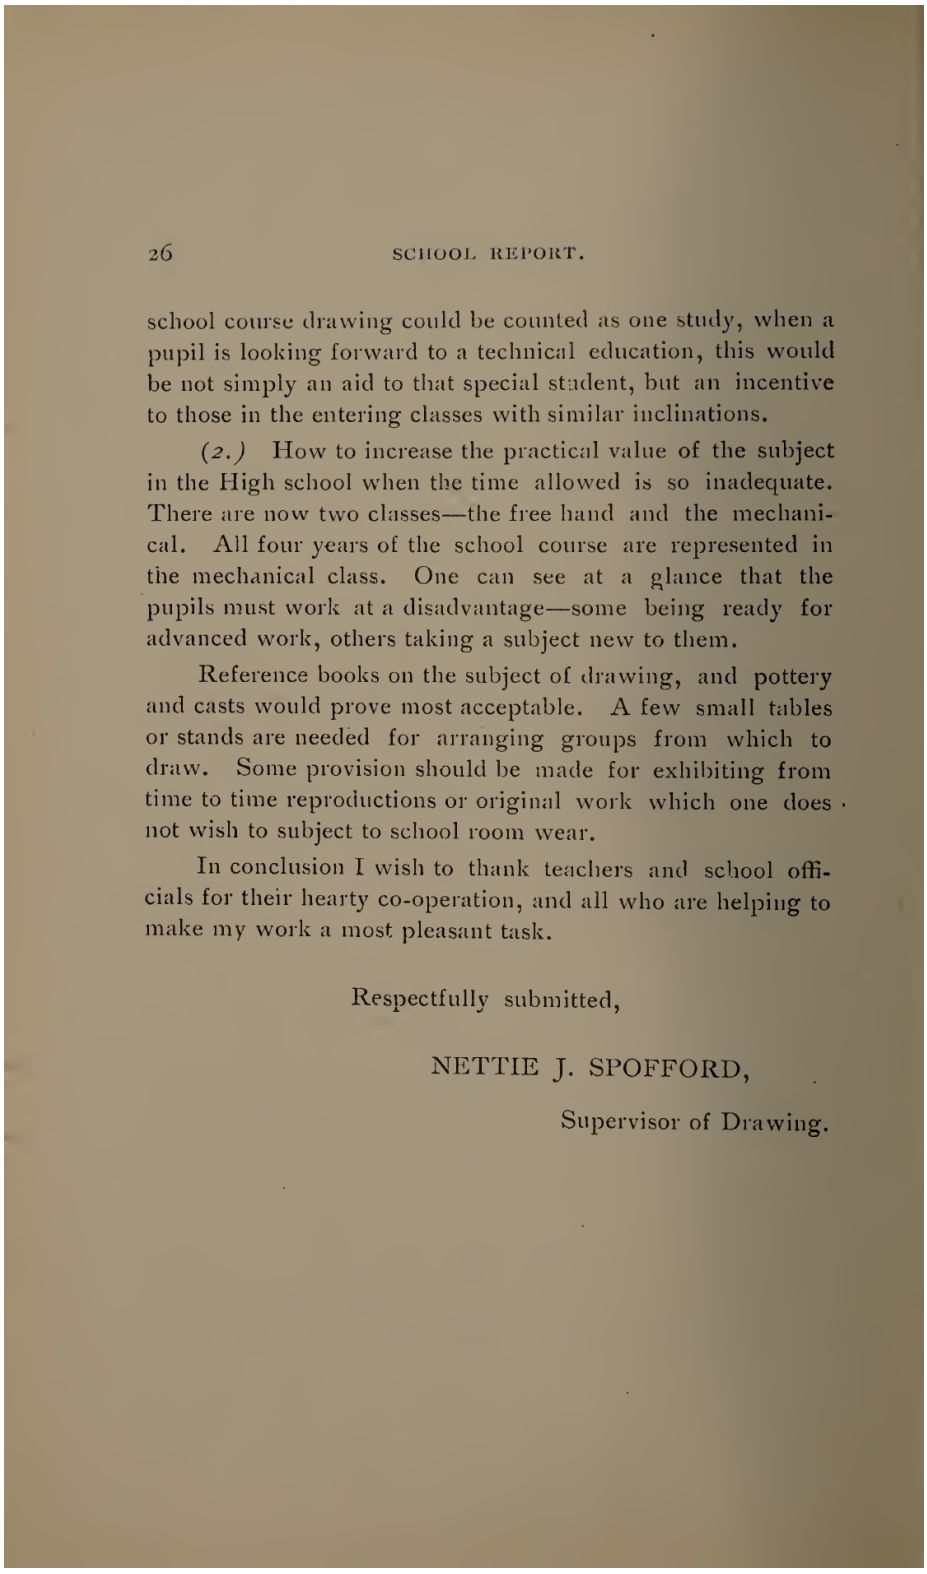

Two problems at the present time under consideration are:

(1.) How to increase in the pupils of the grammar grades and High school the power of concentration and willingness to use that power. Interest will carry one over a certain part of any course, but always there are some difficulties to surmount. If scholars would put as much patience and perseverance into drawing as is required in solving arithmetical problems, the standards of this subject would soon be raised. At the present time the system of marking does not require a pass-mark in drawing for promotion to the next higher grade. Some colleges are now giving points in this subject—both in entrance examinations and in the course of study afterward pursued. If in the last years of the High school course drawing could be counted as one study, when a pupil is looking forward to a technical education, this would be not simply an aid to that special student, but an incentive to those in the entering classes with similar inclinations.

(2.) How to increase the practical value of the subject in the High school when the time allowed is so inadequate. There are now two classes—the free hand and the mechanical. All four years of the school course are represented in the mechanical class. One can see at a glance that the pupils must work at a disadvantage—some being ready for advanced work, others taking a subject new to them.

Reference books on the subject of drawing, and pottery and casts would prove most acceptable. A few small tables or stands are needed for arranging groups from which to draw. Some provision should be made for exhibiting from time to time reproductions or original work which one does not wish to subject to school room wear.

In conclusion I wish to thank teachers and school officials for their hearty co-operation, and all who are helping to make my work a most pleasant task.

Respectfully submitted,

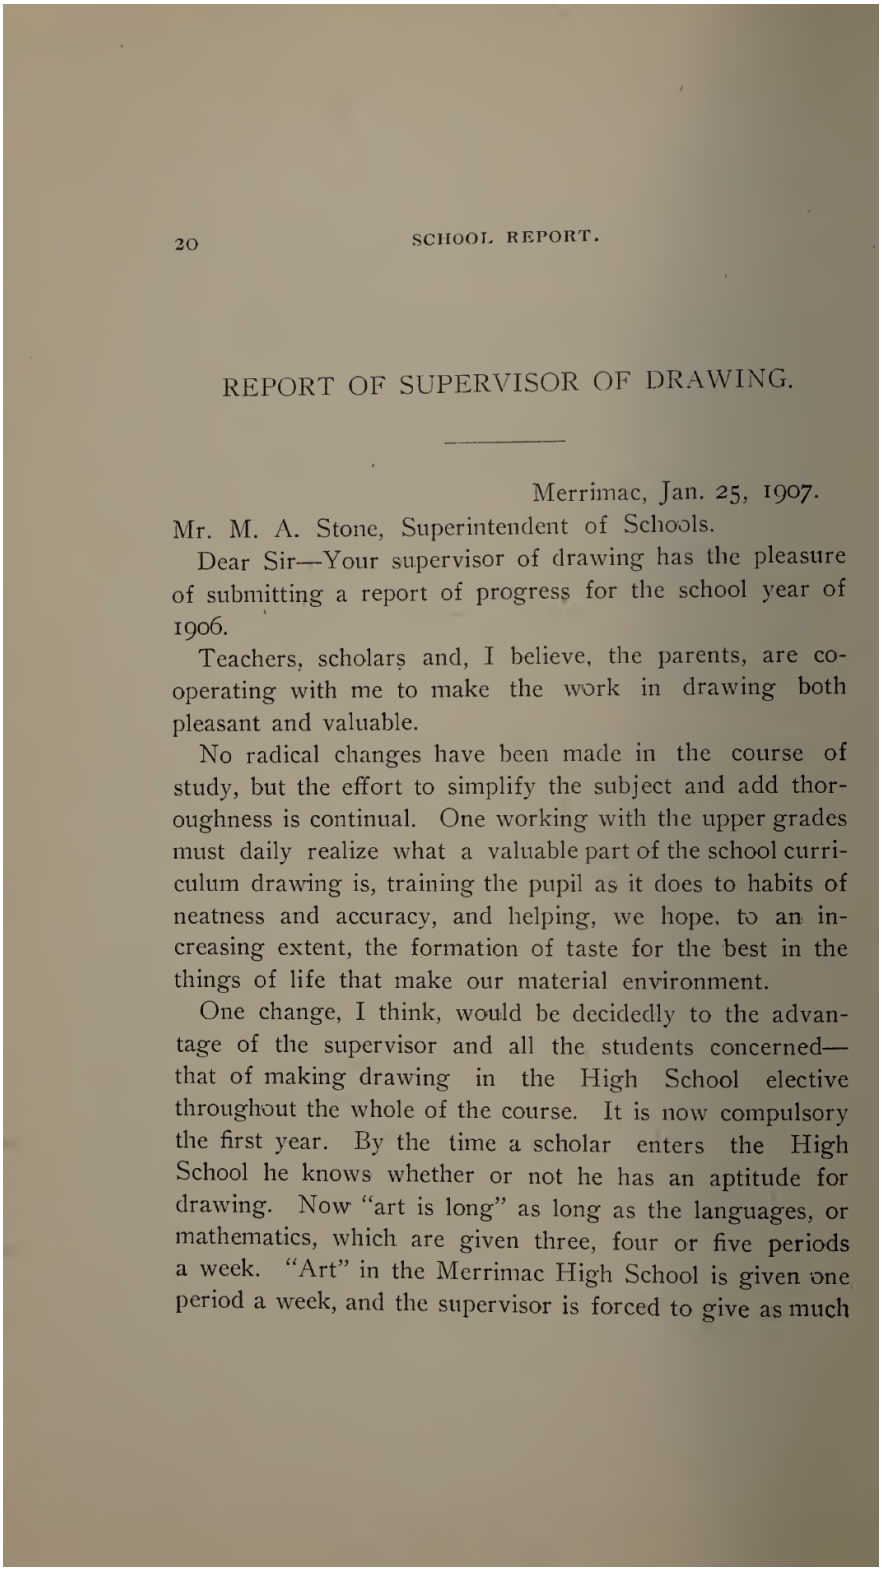

NETTIE J. SPOFFORD,

Supervisor of Drawing.

20 SCHOOL REPORT.

REPORT OF SUPERVISOR OF DRAWING.

Merrimac, Jan. 25, 1907.

Mr. M. A. Stone, Superintendent of Schools.

Dear Sir—Your supervisor of drawing has the pleasure of submitting a report of progress for the school year of 1906.

Teachers, scholars and, I believe, the parents, are co-operating with me to make the work in drawing both pleasant and valuable.

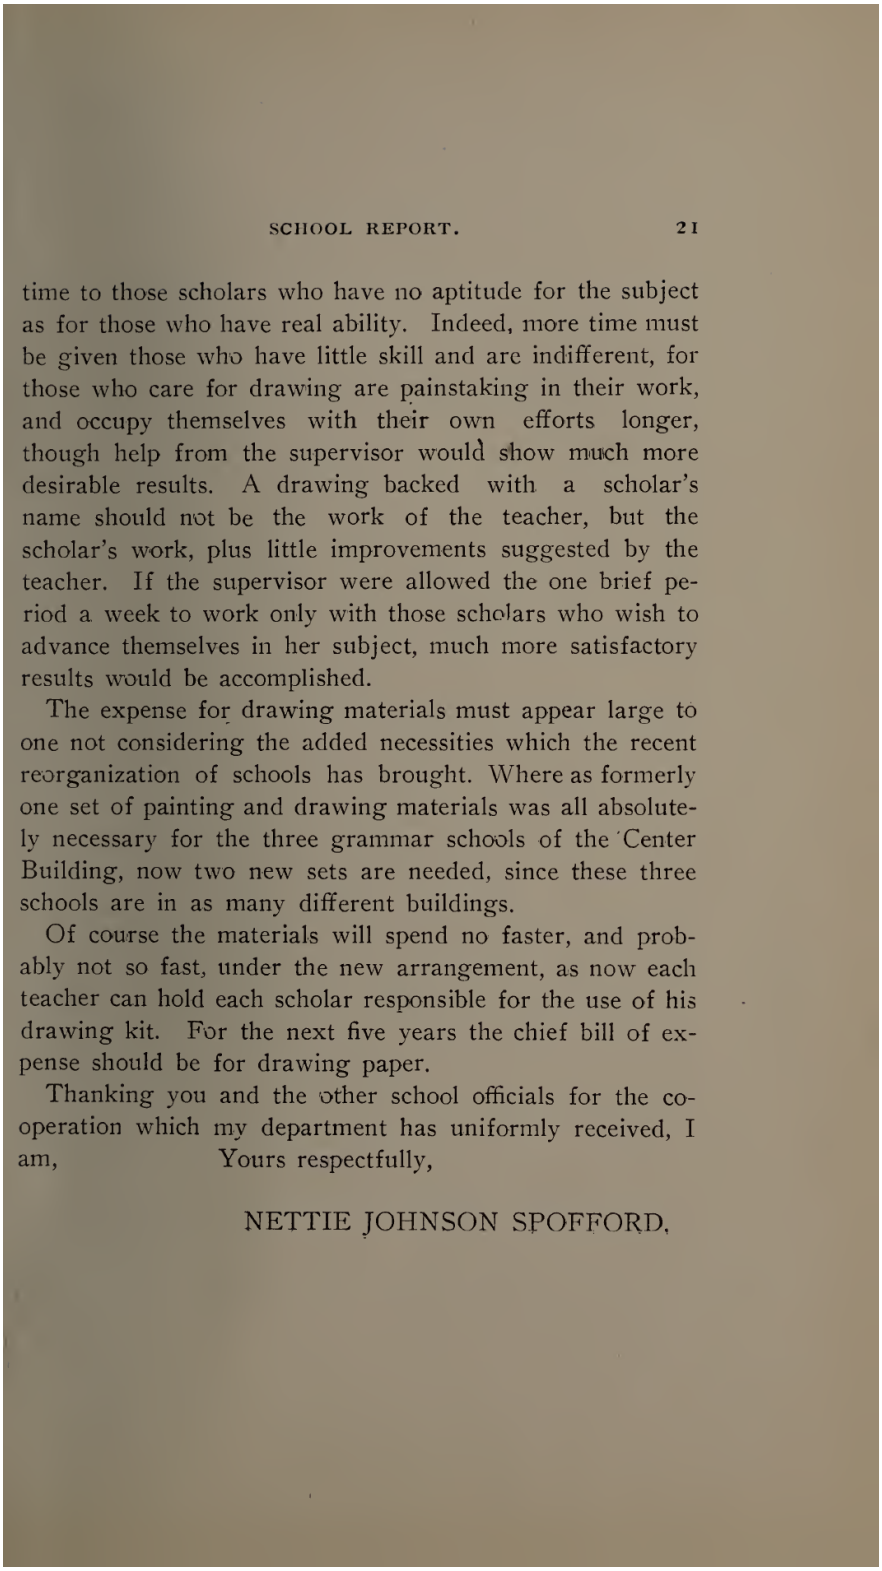

No radical changes have been made in the course of study, but the effort to simplify the subject and add thoroughness is continual. One working with the upper grades must daily realize what a valuable part of the school curriculum drawing is, training the pupil as it does to habits of neatness and accuracy, and helping, we hope, to an increasing extent, the formation of taste for the best in the things of life that make our material environment.

One change, I think, would be decidedly to the advantage of the supervisor and all the students concerned—that of making drawing in the High School elective throughout the whole of the course. It is now compulsory the first year. By the time a scholar enters the High School he knows whether or not he has an aptitude for drawing. Now "art is long" as long as the languages, or mathematics, which are given three, four or five periods a week. "Art" in the Merrimac High School is given one period a week, and the supervisor is forced to give as much time to those scholars who have no aptitude for the subject as for those who have real ability. Indeed, more time must be given those who have little skill and are indifferent, for those who care for drawing are painstaking in their work, and occupy themselves with their own efforts longer, though help from the supervisor would show much more desirable results. A drawing backed with a scholar's name should not be the work of the teacher, but the scholar's work, plus little improvements suggested by the teacher. If the supervisor were allowed the one brief period a week to work only with those scholars who wish to advance themselves in her subject, much more satisfactory results would be accomplished.

The expense for drawing materials must appear large to one not considering the added necessities which the recent reorganization of schools has brought. Where as formerly one set of painting and drawing materials was all absolutely necessary for the three grammar schools of the Center Building, now two new sets are needed, since these three schools are in as many different buildings.

Of course the materials will spend no faster, and probably not so fast, under the new arrangement, as now each teacher can hold each scholar responsible for the use of his drawing kit. For the next five years the chief bill of expense should be for drawing paper.

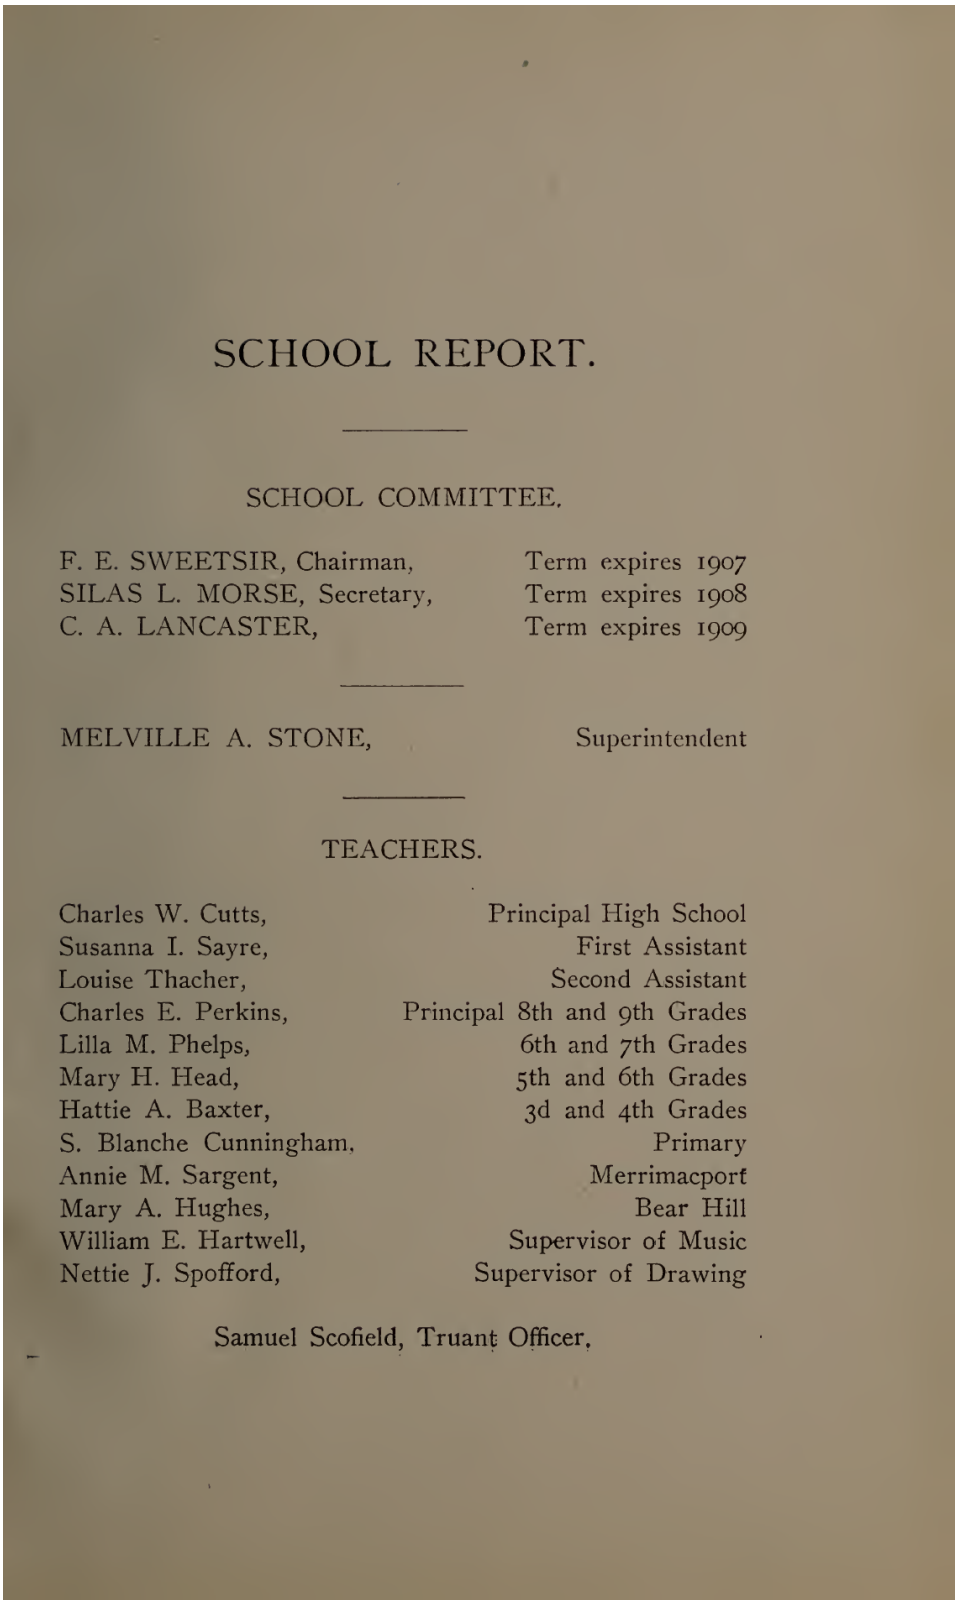

Thanking you and the other school officials for the cooperation which my department has uniformly received, I am, Yours respectfully,

NETTIE JOHNSON SPOFFORD.
